Everyone goes through it.Now to get the basic guitar chords down put one finger down at a time and check for buzzing, if it buzzes it's not right. Make small adjustments in your finger placement so that it works.Now once you have got to the place where the chord is not buzzing, raise your fingers off the fretboard and place them slowly into place. Keep doing that until you are confident that your can grab a chord quickly.You are building memory in your nervous system and that works best if you move slowly and as relaxed as you can.As soon as you get one chord down, go to the next chord in the chord progression until you get them all.After that turn on your metronome and move between the chords. Rinse and repeat until you know the chord progression.Here's some simple chord progressions to learn. Just use any rhythm that feels good to you. Refer to the free printable guitar chord chart.First learn to make each basic guitar chord sound right and then practice slow changes among them two at a time. Use a metronome at first when you are able to change between them without it.Practice them until they feel smooth and natural to you. Use them to make up a simple song if you like.If you have a drum machine practice with different rhythms. It's amazing what different rhythms will do for a song.C | F | G | CD | G | A | DG | C | D | GA | D | E | AC | Dm | G | CD | Em | A | DG | Am | D | GSo go ahead use the free printable guitar chord chart, memorize and learn each basic guitar chord so that it is an automatic reflex you can use without thinking.Be patient with yourself. Guitar chords are three or more notes played simultaneously. They have a much fuller sound than playing the individual strings. Guitar chord charts, or chord diagrams, show you how to play a chord on the guitar. They display a picture of the guitar neck oriented vertically. The vertical lines are the guitar strings, and the horizontal lines are the frets. The string to the far left is the thickest, lowest string - the 6th, low E string. The black dots show you where to put your fingers. The numbers at the top of the box are the left hand fingers that play the notes. An "X" means that a string should not be played, and the "0" denotes an open string, which means it is played with no finger placement. The following guitar courses are available at TrueFire and include video lessons on how to play guitar chords. Start with these beginner guitar lessons and work your way up!
